

There were new demands or reservations from different representatives of the society, sometimes in contradictory way.

There is a debate among census statisticians whether the new censuses of the 2010 round can be still performed in traditional way or the administrative registers will reach to a quality level which will guarantee the feasibility of at least combined or register-based censuses. To decide about it we are in the last minute, as the legal procedures are very lengthy, the development of registers also. Usually a microcensus should be conducted between censuses in the forthcoming years for testing methodological changes.

The exploitation of existing administrative and other data sources can help us in exploring new ways and solutions in providing statistics in new manner and with better quality. It is not too hard to forecast that the development of the information technology will support every effort of the statistical community.

In press - 6th October 2004.